"Modern conversations that have a political or ethical reference are often distorted by what I call 'Correctspeak'. It has a more significant connotation than Orwell's 'Newspeak' because 'Correctspeak' comes just as much from within as without. It is language manipulated by guilt. It's applied most insidiously in democratic multicultural countries. Multiculturalism could not survive without political correctness which exploits feelings of guilt. Watch how people melt away from you if you say something that is not politically correct. Test the theory in a checkout queue at Coles New World or in the foyer of the National Gallery of Victoria..." - (quote from Erin Kubizek, a character in novel 'The Holocaust Denier' - 2012)
